INFORMATION FOR PERSONS PURCHASING AND/OR CARING FOR AQUATIC LIFE AND AMPHIBIANS

Aquatic life and amphibians have been implicated in the transmission of diseases caused by bacteria such as Salmonella and Mycobacterium organisms. Pet shops should encourage persons that purchase such pets to adhere to the following guidelines:

- Persons that care for or maintain aquatic life or amphibians should wash their hands thoroughly, immediately after contact with the animals or after handling material that had contact with the animals.
- Water or other substances that come in contact with aquatic life or amphibians should never be permitted to come in contact with food and should never be allowed to enter or otherwise contaminate food preparation areas.
- Adult caretakers should ensure that children and others handling aquatic life and amphibians follow the above guidelines.

The above information was provided by the State Public Health Veterinarian.
